

UK.org.
Comment.

10 October 2004

WHO ARE THE REAL SPDC PUPPETS?

UK org, laid out exactly, how the regime would move many months ago, and it has not been disappointed in its foresight. Parties are being formed under the guidance of the SPDC. The NLD has experienced internal problems for some time, but are now splitting into factions. We say again, when it appears that Burma has a multi-party programme, it will call an election, and no matter who wins, the SPDC, in its new disguise, will still be the masters. It's unfortunate that outside of the PDP, others, did not heed the message, and are still rambling on, lost in a cloud of wild delusion. The more we talk to Burma observers, or we should say, observers of the people, who consider themselves as Burma's representatives, the more obvious it becomes, that the world is becoming less concerned over a people who cannot agree among themselves about anything, other than to do nothing else but rage and shout obscenities, and criticise those who do act, which reveal clear signs that although these individuals live in democracies and enjoy the freedoms and comforts it brings, they still do not comprehend, or, are not willing, to live by the basic principles of a democracy, as displayed by some, who demand that certain individuals or groups be expelled from a listserve, much in line with some listserves, who outlaw anyone who does not conform to their own doctrine. It is this attitude, and not the actions or opinions of those they condemn, which are allied to the SPDC. Open debate covering all aspects of opposition, is the first step in displaying democratic tendencies, which eventually becomes the roots of which, will strangle the regime, and build the foundation of democracy. When the SPDC witness this collaboration between the pro-democracy elements, it will know its days are numbered!

One party, one voice mentality, is nothing more than dictatorship, and should be totally swamped by all who wish to create an open forum for intelligent minds to do ethical battle. Anyone who disagrees must surely, be working on behalf of the SPDC?

There are many political parties in the UK, representing the extreme left, to the extreme right wing of politics. There are small groups who cannot decide on any doctrine. Those extreme fanatics or fascists, although allowed a voice, are totally ignored by the majority of the population, who simply smile, and continue debate as they see fit to do so in a free society. Burma's seriously concerned pro-democracy activists should do the same, less they continue to run the regime path of divide and rule.

UK org.
Comment

UK org.

Member Comment:

22 October 2004

ONLY THE FOOLHARDY SHED TEARS FOR KHIN NYUNT

I am amazed at the sympathetic statements made toward this man; some are even saying that Burma's hope of democracy has been lost with his departure. It is exactly this type of display where tyrants are made to become human, that those in the world who are unaware of realities, believe advancement had been made through him. Allowing him, any kind of credit is a travesty to common sense and humanity. He has done nothing, only deceive, and in turn, applies the brakes on the voices of condemnation by simply taking them in another direction, with the message of; lets us wait and see what happens now! And so the saga continues, without any signs of a conclusion, and still, people fall into the trap!

For a man who reached high rank under Ne Win, where many knives lay ready to back stab, as regimes so often have, Khin Nyunt, would have had to be just as cunning and ruthless as his master, and he was. This man instigated, imprisonment, torture, male practises, blackmail, extortion, murder, corruption in all its guises, and any thing else required to keep his master in power, including attacking, imprisoning, and torturing his own blood relatives. This is not a nice man.

For anyone who has seriously followed the pattern of dictatorships, and in this case the SPDC, or Burma's military rulers, just in case they change their title before posting, they will see the course of events as their reign of terror continues, is the same. It stays the same, because clinging to a tyrannical power base has only one set of rules; get rid of anyone who poses a threat, and/or divert attention away from public issues by staging a ploy. How quickly the world forgot, and many Burmese it would appear, the supposed coup by Ne Win's clan, who were first sentenced to death, only to have it commuted, where they were treated as lords and ladies in prison, and allowed out when prying eyes were not about. Soon they will quietly filter back into society and enjoy life to the full. These people are so tightly locked in a time warp, they really believe that their deceit fools the world

Khin Nyunt's manoeuvres these past few years, were just part of the game these people play in order to prolong their stay. This man was no friend to Suu Kyi, nor was he her only chance of release. To think that an ally of democracy lies in this man would be a foolish notion. The route to democracy is a ploy, nothing more than a cul-de-sac terminating where it began, back in the regimes own den of iniquity.

It's worth keeping a close eye on events right now; to see just how many bottles fall in the coming weeks, all associated with KN and all due to ill health no doubt, then, the stage play will continue on with the same storyline, but a different chapter!

Dean

A UK org member.

WIN MIN HTUN RECEIVED MORE LOVE AND ATTENTION THAN THE BURMESE MILITARY REGIME

Date: 27-10-04

A Burmese worker and a member of the PDP party Mr. WIN MIN HTUN 26 passed away in Bangkok on 20-10-04 after a car accident taken place between his motorbike and a private car. The PDP party members decorously organised a funeral on 27th October 2004, and paid a last tribute to him. Around 200 people attended the funeral ceremony and a prayer team chanted some religious hymns. His relatives were informed in time and his friends contributed donations to support his family.

Thank to the members of the Thai NGOs and a member of the Thai Parliament, who also joined the funeral and supported the event. Their presence boosted the morale of the bereaved Burmese attended who did not have such an experience before.

The event ended peacefully in the afternoon, and all attendants felt that, although WIN MIN HTUN was a Burmese worker at a petrol station in Bangkok, his final day surely outdid the final days of the dictator Gen. Ne Win and other Generals where only a handful of mourners attended their funerals.

Mr. WIN MIN HTUN was an active member of the PDP and looked forward to the day when he will return to a free Burma and participate in its reconstruction. He will be missed greatly by his friends, family, and fellow members in the PDP. It is hoped that others will take up the baton of the liberation movement to advance the day when the people and the PDP will force the military junta to give up power to a multiparty democratic coalition which will prepare for a one person one vote General Election supervised by the UN, the EU, and the ASEAN.

Htun's effort will remain our guiding inspiration in the struggle against military dictatorship in Burma.

PDP Information Desk,
Parliamentary Democracy Party (Burma)
Liberated Area

pdp_office@yahoo.com